QUAKER MISSION TO THE MAURITIUS AND SOUTH AFRICA."

Concluded. In visiting the missionary station at Zoar, Mr. Backhouse found occasion to make some remarks, the importance of which should be kept in view by all those who select and send forth missionaries to uncivilized tribes. The ingenuity of missionaries, as handicraftsmen, has been no much in it that might be recognized as agreeing mean instrument in advancing the higher ob. with the character of "singing with the spirit icots of their lab rs.

The present missionary, who is placed here by man, but does not possess much knowledge of handieraft trades. Some knowledge of these is highly desirable in a missionary, both to enable him to make his own dwelling comfortable, and to teach useful arts to those amongst whom he is sionary, at having allowed us to pay her for a blood. The missionary heims always to the impact heims always the impact placed. The missionary being alive to the im. sic p portance of such arts, had adopted measures to get some of the youths instructed in smith's work, &c. The Hottentots were voluntarily building him a house, being only supplied at the expense of the Society with one meal a day.

In advancing to Bethelsdorp, Mr. Backhouse

In another place, we find the dogs displaying better taste, by devouring the grapes of the missionaries. We regret to learn that the station of Bethelsdorp was not found in a very satisfactory condition, though the causes may be but temporary.

An accident, one of many, having befallen their

glimpse of a chief and family group of Caffres.

We accompanied Wallace Hewitson on a visit to the Caffre chief Macomo. He was residing contiguously, and at whose place a considerable number of Caffres were assembled to celebrate the marriage of one of this chief's sons. In the minority of Sandili, the principal chief of the Gai-ka Caffres, Macomo was a sort of regent. The Blinkwater is a little winding river, on a rocky bed, bordered with willows and other trees; near to its side Macomo had a hut and a tent. The bride of his son was of the Tambookie tribe, the chiefs not being allowed to marry into their own tribes. If they violate this rule, the sons of such wives are not considered the successors of the chieftainship of their fathers. Macomo met us courteously, and introduced us to several of his own wives, and to the bride; but, as we had no interpreter, we could make little out in conversa tion, we understanding but little of Dutch, which some of them spoke, and they but little of Euglish. It was their milking time when we pas-sed two of their cattle kraals, at one of which they kindly offered us milk. The chief and several other men were seated on the ground near the tent. They were dressed in karosses or cloaks of skin, with the hair on; that of the chief was of leopard skin, which is seldom worn but by men of rank, and is expensive. Prepared ox hides are the kind chiefly used; the inside, which is worn outward, is so worked away, as, in good kaross s, to be fibrous, looking much like hair; it is color-ed almost black, with a preparation in which grease is a large constituent. The karosses of the women have a piece attached at the back of the neck, of about four inches in width, and reach ing to the heels, covered with brass buttons; they also often wear the shell of a small tortois nded from the shoulder of the kaross. Sev suspended from the shoulder of the hands eral of the women had head dresses on the pres ent occasion, in the form of square bags a foot high, standing erect, and transversely covered with small white beads; most of them had also numerous rings of thick brass wire around their arms. They had much the general aspect of an order of nuns. The bodies and limbs of bothsex wagon, we were accompanied by two Caffres; the errand of one of them was to bring back four pocket handkerchiefs for the wives of the chief nd of his son, and a little tobacco for the chief. They inquired for brandy by its Dutch name-brandywyn-and were informed that we used no strong drink; at the same time we denounced the evil consequences of its use.

The travelers were in the vicinity of Philipton, where Mr. Backhouse makes the following observations on the blessed influences of the introduction of Christianity on the condition of the women of Caffreland, as of every other region : Before the introduction of Christianity into Caffraria, the wives of the Caffres cultivated the ground, the men disdaining such toil. On the ntroduction of ploughs, the men made comparisons between the quantity of work performed by them and by the women. A chief named Thopo, who received a plough from the contribution made by many friends for the promotion of agriculture g the native tribes, sent a message in 1842, acknowledging gratefully the present, which he called "a strong wife."

In the course of the day, I had an interesting interview with several matronly Christian wo-Their nephew had been our guide in Caffraria, and we had proposed that he should accompany us beyond the Great Orange River. They took the subject under grave consideration, and, notwithstanding their willingness to do anything in their power to promote the cause of the Redeemer, they came to the conclusion that it was not air duty to give him up for this service -Their deliberation reminded me much of the manner in which questions of importance are treated in the meetings for discipline of the Society of Friends; and I have no doubt that they were enabled to come to a right judgment in the matter. The manner in which they expressed their sympathy for my companion and myself, and their belief that the Lord would provide for us, was both affecting and

Mr. Backhouse gives little information concerning the political state of the conony, or of the emigrant settlements at Natal; and the various missionary raports from South Africa are now so frequent and regular, that he has little to communicate of missionary enterprises, beyond his personal experiences in the course of his pilgrim-age. Instead of copying out any of his reports from the missionary stations visited, we select his picture of a happy and hospitable family, which conveys a very favorable impression of the time and scope of this Quaker journal.

We reached the Uitkomst early, and were again received with that frank inspitality for which Hendrik and Maria C. Van Zyl are noted, and which is especially shown to all who labor in the Gospel, from a real love to the truth. In the evening we had a religious opportunity with the family and rervants. Here all were cared for, and taught to read, whatever might be their circumstences or color. After the reading of the Scriptures, we addressed them, and were engaged in vocal prayer; a sweet feeling of divinc overshadowing prevailed to such a degree that it was difficult to separate. It is worthy of re-mark, that in the drought of the previous summer, when the corn was ready to perish on the ground, rain fell at this place, so that the crops here were good, notwithstanding most of the corn was destroyed in the surrounding country. H. Van Zyl would not, however, take advantage of this; but having first ascertained what the mis-sionaries at Ebenezer wanted, whom he supplied at a very low rate, and that those at the Kamies berg, Nisbett Bath, and Komaggas had sufficient supplies, he sold what remained above his own wants at a very moderate price, saying that the 30th.—Being rainy, we remained with our kind friends at the Uitkomst, and spent most of the time in writing: we had also another agreeable opportunity of religious communication with the family. Maria C. Van Zyl had injured her arm by an accident before our arrival, and she was still feverish and in great pain; nevertheless she was unremitting in her attentions. > We must not omit to mention, that from funds liber liv supplied by friends, Mr. Backhouse was enabled, after his retun to England in 1841, to supply Robert Moffat with the means of printing supply Robert Mollat with the heart of planting six thousand copies of the Scripture Lessons of the British and Foreign School Society, which the latter had previously translated into the Bechuana language, which is the tongue of the Bechusna people.

Mr. Backhouse concluded a pilgrimage more extensive than any ever previously undertaken by a Quaker apostle, not excepting George Fox, at London, which he reached onthe 15th of February, 1841, after an absence of nine years and five months from his native land, his friends and his family. 'These who have found pleasure and improvement in tracing his wanderings, will, we are certain, sympath ze in the simple minded and pious expressions of gratitude for preservation and deliverance from many perils, with which the

RICH'S IMPROVED PATENT SALAMANDER
SAFE—Warranted dry as well as fire and thief proof.—
The following cartificates from some of the most respectable merchants and others in the city of New-Orleans, establishes their fire proof qualities beyond all doubt;
"The undersuped kere thi, day witnessed the trial of one of Rich's improved patent Salamander Safes in the furnace of the Sea Bird.
"The bale was placed in the furnace at 10 minutes after II o'clock A. M. and remained there three hours, constantly exposed to the most intense heat that could be created by the use of pitch pine and cottonwood. If was then taken to the store of Mr. Rich's agent in this city and opened, when they found that the rontents were neither burned nor scorched, and that the wood work bore no supenarance of inving been exposed fire. The undersigned are convinced that this Safe was subjected to greater heat than could possibly exist at the burning of any building in this city, however combustible in contents; and they therefore have no houstation in saying that Euch's Sefes are eminently secure against the risk of fire, under any circumstances whatever.
